

Basic Google

October 7, 2015

Google Drive is a tremendous resource for educators for lesson planning, brainstorming, and other teacher-centered activities. However, there is even more potential in the ways Google Drive can be used with students. In face-to-face, blended, and online classes, Google Drive can be used for collaboration among students and with others outside the four walls of the classroom.

As a face-to-face, blended, and online instructor, Nikki D Robertson has found that Google Drive allows her to easily incorporate interactive and collaborative learning experiences with students even if they are separated by distance and time.

Join Nikki as she shares strategies and examples for using Google Drive for interaction in face-to-face, blended, and online courses.

This course empowers teachers to support At-Risk Students Through Instructional Technology.

Lunch will be provided.

Please bring a laptop to this session. Participant must complete additional out of class assignment to earn PLU.
